

WHO AM I?

Purpose

In this activity, you'll begin to explore some of the characteristics that make up your identity, that define you and make you unique. This will allow you to see that you are a member of multiple communities and that people no longer have singular identities or communities, but rather multiple ones that are interconnected. This activity will challenge the idea of a single narrative that tells the story of your life or (on a larger or more global scale) that of history.

Practices

Contextualization, scale

You'll assess your roles or identities in a variety of the communities of which you are a part. You'll begin to contextualize your identities within different communities and your role in a broader or more global framework. In addition, you'll engage in some scale switching as you view your identity on a local, regional, national, and then global scale.

Process

In this activity, you'll start with a discussion about identity and list the different identities you have (for example, at school, home, on sports teams). Then, you'll draw representations of how these identities fit into different spatial scales using the Who Am I? Worksheet. Finally, you'll wrap up the activity with a discussion about similarities and differences that can be seen when comparing each of your drawings.

WHO AM I?

Name:  Date:

Directions: In each of the cells of the comic, draw a representation of your identity at the appropriate scale.

Local	Regional

WHO AM I?

Name:  Date:

National	Global

